Substantiate the statement. These evergreen rainforests absorb carbon dioxide and produce oxygen at a massive rate. As a result, these forests are often referred to as the 'Lungs of the World'. In equatorial rainforests, the forest is cleared at certain places for shifting cultivation. When these clearings are abandoned after cultivation, less luxuriant secondary forests spring up. Such secondary forests are called 'belukar' in Malaysia. In the coastal areas and brackish swamps, mangrove forests thrive. Haven't you identified the characteristic features of the flora in the equatorial climatic region? Now, let's discuss the diversity of fauna in this region. The equatorial climatic region is rich in the diversity of wildlife. Because of the climatic characteristics of this region, most of the wildlife thrive in trees. The animals which spend most of their lives in trees are called arboreal animals. Since sufficient sunlight does not penetrate to the floor in these dense forests, undergrowth is absent. As a result, herbivores that feed on this undergrowth are not commonly seen. Consequently, carnivores that prey on them are also negligible in number.

Wildlife in this region includes lemurs, chimpanzees, orangutans, tree-dwelling reptiles, hippopotamuses, alligators, and many birds such as parrots, toucan and hornbills.

B.What is weathering? Explain the diferent types of weathering processes.

Disintegration of rocks into small pieces.

Types of weathering are

Physical	Chemical	Biological
Due to temperature changes, rock minerals expand and contract. Over a period of time, this leads to the disintegration of rocks. In addition, when water gets trapped inside the cracks of rocks and freezes into ice, it expands. This causes the cracks to widen and gradually breaks the rocks apart	Oxygen, carbon dioxide, water, and other substances engage in chemical reactions with the minerals in rocks, leading to the chemical decomposition of rocks	The protrusion of plant roots through the cracks in rocks, the burrowing of animals that make holes in rocks, and the decay of plant and animal remains also cause the disintegration of rocks.
